The poster features a background of various national flags at the top. Below the flags are two circular logos: the American Youth Soccer Organization (AYSO) logo, which includes the text 'AMERICAN YOUTH SOCCER ORGANIZATION', 'AYSO', and 'EST. 1964'; and the Palos Verdes Region 10 logo, which includes the text 'REGION 10' and 'PALOS VERDES'. The main title 'WORLD CUP WATCH PARTY!' is prominently displayed in the center. Below the title, three key features are listed: 'GIANT SCREEN LIVE MATCH VIEWING', 'WEAR YOUR TEAM COLORS', and 'FAMILY FUN & ACTIVITIES'. A large, curved banner across the middle reads 'FREE COMMUNITY SOCIAL EVENT'. In the center, there is a soccer ball with various national flags on its panels, including Switzerland, England, Germany, and the United States. Below the ball, there are two QR codes: one for Instagram with the handle '@ayso_palosverdes' and one for Facebook with the handle '@aysopalosverdes'. At the bottom, the event details 'JUNE 12TH 6PM AT PROMENADE PV' are written in a large, outlined font.

Local Lacrosse Coach Honored As One Of The Best With Hall Of Fame Induction

HALL OF FAME

• Long-time lacrosse coach helped introduce sport to the Peninsula and Southern California.

By Cherise Stoll

Ready, Set, Draw!

Marissa Hewitt is being inducted into the Los Angeles Lacrosse Hall of Fame.

Growing up in Connecticut and graduating as a student-athlete from Brown University, Hewitt had a lacrosse stick in hand from an early age. In 2005, Hewitt and her now husband, Dan Spring, packed their bags and headed west, moving to California for what they thought would be only a couple of years.

"When I first got to California, I started my own tutoring business, and I was literally handing out flyers I printed on my home computer at the farmer's market. Then one of my new students walked in carrying a lacrosse stick. The mom was like, 'Oh my God, do you know anything about lacrosse?'" Hewitt recalled.

Hewitt was introduced to lacrosse

in PE class on the East Coast, where the sport is woven tightly into the culture. In contrast, lacrosse had only just begun making its way to the West Coast.

"There was not much lacrosse happening west of the Rockies," Hewitt said, adding that even through her college years, teams were "just sort of sprouting up in the Midwest and, like, Denver."

At first, Hewitt thought she couldn't possibly start coaching lacrosse while actively trying to launch an after-school tutoring business. She then discovered PV High's unique block schedule, which allowed for two hours of practice time during school hours.

"It was just one of those funny things that fell into my lap, and at no point in time did I imagine I was gonna be a lacrosse coach."

Hewitt was just 22 years old when she started teaching lacrosse at PV High, barely older than the high schoolers she coached.

Looking back, Hewitt is reminiscent of the early days of lacrosse in California.

"What we didn't have was other people to play against," she said. "It was this really cute time where the community was so small, and we would have to drive two hours to get games. There was no infrastructure for lacrosse yet, so we just organized our own playoffs, and it felt like a real playoff. We rented stadiums, and we organized all that ourselves."

As the sport continued to grow, it was important to Hewitt to make sure both boys and girls had equal opportunities.

"It was really special for me to put the girls front and center and make sure that we weren't just on the side field of a boys tournament. We actually had referees who were girls lacrosse trained, rather than boys refs who were just kind of popping over."

Her commitment to growing the game extended beyond high school programs and into the broader lacrosse community.

"I bring all the equipment. I don't require anybody to go out and buy anything. We bring all the sticks, we bring all the everything. We're really all about wanting people to try it and fall in love with the sport."

Hewitt is always encouraging kids to just go for it and give lacrosse a try. She noted that for many athletes, it is their second sport and because everyone starts as a beginner, there is room for anyone to improve and succeed.

"For me, lacrosse is also really cool because it's like a great equalizer. Like, everybody is a beginner."

Coach Hewitt Helps Keep Lacrosse Growing

"It gives a lot of people who I think would have walked away from sports for good who either just kind of outgrew their sport or, like I said, got cut or didn't want to pursue it seriously, a second chance at being an athlete and being part of a team."

Hewitt's model makes sports fun again, one camp at a time. That philosophy is reflected through her work with Beach Cities Lacrosse, Pacific Edge Lacrosse, Harlem Lacrosse, and Play Hard, Have Fun!

Recently, Hewitt received the call that she would be inducted into the Los Angeles Lacrosse Hall of Fame.

"I am gonna be in really great company with all the people who I really respect and admire, who helped launch everything."

For all the programs she has built and all the players she has helped send to college, Hewitt said the honor still came as a surprise.

"When I got the phone call, I was delighted, but I was mostly shocked because I didn't even know that was going to be a thing anymore," she said.

After years spent growing the game, building programs, and creating opportunities for young athletes, Hewitt's induction serves as recognition of the impact she has made on lacrosse throughout California.

Lacrosse Takes Over Hesse Park ... The sport of lacrosse continues to grow on the Peninsula and the South Bay.

Brewers Are Perfect ... The PV Brewers finished the season undefeated and won the Pony League championship game at George Allen Field.
